

The true cost

This is a documentary about clothing. About who makes them, and the impact the industry is having on our world. It focuses on how squeezing prices effects over 40million garment workers, their working conditions and the devastating effect costs can have. It explores all the different people producing our garments. It shows the day to day lives of the workers in factories in Bangladesh. Some who are working for $3 a day. It goes on to uncover many other factories and truths.

We learn that 80% of cotton farming in Texas uses GMO seeds. It is stated that organic cotton farming is no longer important. Many children are also working in poor conditions to help support their families.

This would be useful for A-level students as it uncovered the harsh truths in life and how our clothes are made, possibly changing the views of their minds or even inspiring them to help change this.
